I wanted to show the eye movements of characters of various shapes in 'BLINK'. I wanted to focus on my eyes, not on other parts. Therefore, to maximize this, I minimized the movement of areas other than the eyes. Also, I thought it would be easier to concentrate on the eyes if the characters put in the dark without light. To this end, the dark and bright situations were crossed on BLINK. At the beginning of the project, I thought about characterizing circular characters with props and making a difference in shape itself. As a result of initial work on both methods, I decided that it would be better to make a difference in shape. In the dark and bright transition, a character pulled the light string to turn on and off the light.
